

Number portability should be enforced by the deadline issued of 11/24/2002. I would like to have my landline disconnected and be able to use it on a cellular phone but the FCC keeps extending the deadline. What is the point of making rules if the FCC will not enforce and/or keep changing the rules that they are making. To change rules because of pressure from large corporations, who are only looking at their bottom line and not what is good for the public, is not good business practice. I thought the FCC job was to lookout for the best interest of the public, not bow to pressure from corporations.
